WOODFORD ARCHITECTURE AND INTERIORS is supported by a brilliant team of architects, architectural technologists and interior designers. The practice has become known for its quality of service and the timeless architecture and interiors created.

The company's coastal retreat project is moulded into a south-facing grassland slope and replaces a former farmhouse with a highly sustainable new home set within an Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty on the Cornish coast.

The design responds to its sensitive site and uses natural materials including local slate and Shou Sugi Ban timber. Shou Sugi Ban is an ancient Japanese technique used to protect wood by charring it and is quite popular owing to its aesthetic appeal, endurance and eco-friendliness. Beautiful interior spaces are flexible and functional while timeless in style, providing a relaxed and exquisite setting for the residents. Dramatic and sometimes playful volumes are counterbalanced with the careful use of materials, lighting and subtle features for storage and decoration. Huge windows and sliding doors seamlessly connect inside and out.

"The service delivered was excellent right from the get-go", said the client. "The company's attention to detail and unerring focus on quality design that was sympathetic to what the planners would require stood out. The team was excellent at intermediating with consultants and third parties, making the job much easier."
